Para 2 – The UK supports the use of electronic monitoring equipment to establish the location of mining equipment and to support environmental monitoring. However, the UK’s main concern is how this Regulation with the amendments unhelpfully conflates both of the issues which in turns creates complications in how the data is collected, transmitted and to whom it is provided.

Para 2 bis – The UK supports the making of environmental data publicly available, including remote monitoring data, however the UK recognizes that there may be security concerns relating to the release of data pinpointing the precise location of mining equipment. This should be linked in a separate environmental Regulation to environmental provisions in Part IV Regs 46 ter and Regs 48 at least.
